A private university is a four-year university that is not run by the government. Good private universities are non-profit, which means they are not run to make money; they are run to educate students.

The quality of private universities varies widely. Some private universities provide the best education in the world, but others have weak educational programs.

Some private universities are run by a certain church or are based on a specific religion and will have a church on the campus.

Private universities are not supported by state tax money and can be very expensive to attend. The most expensive universities in California are private universities, but private universities also offer the most scholarship opportunities.
